

Narine Sarvazyan graduated from Moscow State University majoring in Biophysics. She received her Ph.D from the Institute of Experimental Biology in Yerevan, Armenia, following by postdoctoral training at the Medical College of Ohio, Toledo. She then joined the faculty ranks of Texas Tech University. Currently Dr. Sarvazyan is an Associate Professor at the George Washington University in Washington DC. Her main research interests include cellular origins of ectopic arrhythmias and cardiotoxicity of anthracyclines.